

KAREN OSHER

Corporate Communications Expert

Every message needs a 'WHY' to leverage the power of personalization.

Karen Osher is a communications leader with extensive experience and knowledge of communications practices. She is currently the Initiatives and Communications Manager at Jones Lang LaSalle (JLL). Prior to this role, Karen held positions in the Shared Services space as an Internal Communications Manager, as well as in the IT space as a Project Manager and Data Analyst within IT Communications, and an Executive Business Partner to the CEO. Karen is responsible for developing cross-functional messaging and ensuring all initiatives and internal communications reach the target audience using the right platform. She is passionate about connecting meaning to messages and specializes in building relationships. Her vast knowledge of process improvement and change management allows her to partner quickly with others to align on opportunities and spearhead initiatives. Karen lives by her belief that projects are people; therefore, relationships and communications are critical for success.

Karen received her Bachelor of Arts in Business Management and Organizational Development and Leadership from Loyola University Chicago and her Master of Science in Communication from Northwestern University. She is also a certified Project Manager and holds a professional certification from the Project Management Institute (PMI). A self-professed lifelong learner, Karen is always looking for ways to develop personally and professionally. When she is not in learning mode, she enjoys baking, working out, and spending time with her family.
